Barton with his force was tomake a diversion in our favor at Coosawhatchie, and, if possible, burn the Railroad bridge at that place. A glance at the map of this section of the country, will show how well these plans were laid. Had they been successful, (and they had every prospect of being so,) three large gaps would have been made in the railroad, which would have prevented, for a time at least, rapid communication between Charleston and Sa-

Although the expedition was not wholly successful, still it is not barren of results. We have ascertained the enemy's force on the line of the railroad, and we have the proud satisfaction of knowing that a small force of our brave men have marched right into their midst, driving them from their strong-holds-whipping them at every turn, and obliging them to destroy a bridge in their retreat, to avoid pursuit and annihilation—thus virtually acknowledging our victory and their defeat. Our troops behaved admirably all through, and their conduct is deserving of all praise.
